WEATHER OF CONCERN

Weather of Concern

Northern California

- A series of wetter and colder storms expected to move through next week beginning late Monday and continuing into Friday. Widespread rainfall expected in the Valley. Hazardous mountain travel expected periodically with heavy snow and gusty winds.

Southern California

- A warm and moist Pacific storm system will affect southwestern California this weekend. Light to moderate rain is expected to affect the region on Saturday and Saturday night. Brief heavy rain is possible Saturday night across south facing foothills and mountains, when peak rainfall rates between 0.20 and 0.40 inches per hour will be likely, although there is a slight chance of intensities reaching critical USGS threshold of 0.50 inches per hour.
- On Sunday, the rainfall is expected to turn to scattered showers, mainly in the morning hours. Storm total rainfall is generally expected to range between 0.50 and 1.50 inches across most coastal and valley areas, with 1.00 to 3.00 inch accumulations possible across south and southwest facing foothills and mountains.
- Potential impacts with this storm system include urban and small stream flooding as well as minor mud and debris flows in recent burn areas, including the Thomas Fire burn scar.

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

The wet unsettled weather pattern will continue for the next week and beyond. Another Pacific low pressure system will target Central CA Saturday and Sunday. Scattered rain showers will spread over the southern half of the Northern California region. The remainder of the region will be partly cloudy with above normal temperatures. High pressure moving overhead on Monday will bring partly cloudy and warmer than normal conditions region-wide. A few mountain showers may linger from the weekend system.

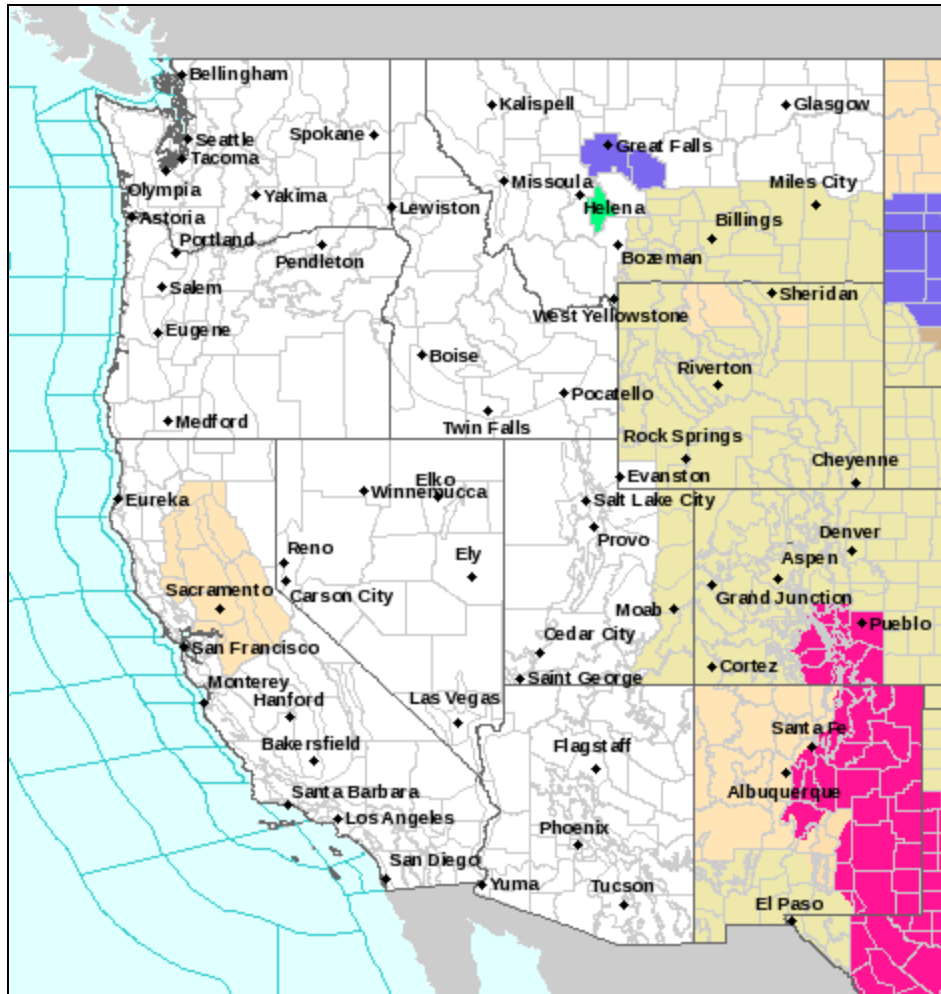

A stronger system will arrive on Tuesday. S-SW winds and clouds will increase during the day, and the first wave of precipitation will move onshore by midday. Snow levels will initially be above 6000 ft, but they will drop to 2000-4000 ft on Wednesday as colder air moves in. Wet unsettled weather from this system will likely persist through the end of the week.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Zonal flow will bring near normal temperatures and high humidity to the region through this weekend. A stronger disturbance coming from the southwest will bring showers to the entire region Saturday afternoon through Sunday afternoon. With this disturbance, most foothill and mountain locations will receive between 1 and 3 inches of rainfall and most coastal and valley locations will receive between a quarter inch and an inch of rainfall. A weak ridge of high pressure will bring a few degrees of warming and a little lower humidity to the area early next week. A potential strong storm may bring significant rainfall along with strong southerly winds and below normal temperatures Wednesday through the end of next week.
